The Carpenters' Bulgarian Playlist (& Other Adventures from 1990s Bulgaria)

In the early days of May 1995 Scott and Susan Carpenter and their 11-month-old son Alex moved into a simple two-bedroom apartment right off Vitosha Boulevard, by the National Palace of Culture (NDK), in the Bulgarian capital, Sofia. They had a view of the nearby mountain, also called Vitosha, and would listen to the Bulgarian national anthem every 15 minutes.

On a Warm, Sunny Afternoon in the Philippopolis Forum...

What did the sunlit interior of the town's grandest church look like on a late afternoon sometime in the late 5th century? Thanks to VR reconstructions by Sofia-based Animajor Studios, we need not only imagine but can also take a leisurely tour of the Bishop's Basilica of Philippopolis. Take a sneak peek now and enjoy the full experience at the Basilica's Visitor Center later in 2020.
